A record is a written memorial or history of the judicial proceedings in a case.

A record is a written account, memorial, or history of judicial proceedings in a case.¹ Only court orders appearing or intended to appear of record are entitled to recognition,² and all orders not entered of record are extrajudicial and void.³ While a party is entitled to use a privately contracted certified shorthand reporter, that reporter is not a substitute for the official court reporter, and only the official reporter's transcript will be considered the official record of the proceedings.⁴
